WOULDN'T HAVE MISSED BATTLE

Joe Sills, Now in English Hospital Don't Regret Experience Though He Got a Bullet Through Both Legs.

Private Joe Sills, has written as follows from an English hospital to his friend, Chris Hicks, of Smith avenue, this city:

Birmingham, England, Dec. 5, 1918.

Dear Old Pal Chris: I received your letter of September 22d, and believe me, I was pleased to hear from you because I thought you had forgotten me altogether.

Your letter went to France before it came here, because you addressed it there.

You probably know by now that I got nipped by a German machine gun bullet, and the damn thing went clean through both my legs above the knees, but I can thank the good Lord that it did not hit my nerves in my left leg and now I have no use of the foot at all, although I manage to get around on crutches quite well.

Here are the full details of the happening on Sunday, September 29th, 1918:

At 5:50 o'clock a. m. our barrage started, and believe me, Chris, it was some barrage. Both machine guns and artillery and the noise was so great you could not hear yourself breathe.

Well, off we went for the Jerries (Germans) and when we got to his first line of trenches we could see many of them scattered about, dead and wounded. But, of course, we were not looking for that sort so we kept on going ahead, making a dash for that famous Hindenburg Line which the Germans thought could never be broken, but it was only our boys. They did not stop there but proceeded on to their objective, which was a point opposite the canal du Nord, but I was one of the unfortunate ones and fell just this side of the Hindenburg Line which was about 7:30 a. m. I crawled into a shell hole in which was one of my army pals who was wounded. He had a bullet in his shoulder and one in the ankle, so I patched myself up and also my pal and then walked or rather ran, about fifty yards to see if I could find some stretcher bearers for my pal, but then my foot went bad and I was done for as far as walking was concerned, so I crawled about ten yards to a trench where I lay about seven hours with a sergeant of K. Co., 107th Inf. Finally four stretcher bearers came and got me out of there (after putting a few German overcoats over me) and carried me to our dressing station. But I was not there long before they sent me to a British R. A. P. (regimental army post).

They kept me there in the rain about an hour, thinking I was a German because I had the German overcoats over me, but they finally put me in an auto and took me to the 16th C. S. C. (casualty clearing station) where I was kept the remainder of the night. The next morning they sent me to the 5th General Hospital in Rouen (France) for one week, and from there to England, and here I am and have been since the 5th, which is almost two months ago today.

But I can tell you Chris, I would not have missed that battle for anything, and I can say I went through a little since I came over here.

I was very sorry to hear about Jack Joyce and also Jack Noonan being killed, as they were both in Co. M when we came away from Kingston, only to get transferred at Sparranburg, S. C., but we all came over together on the same ship and went in the line together at Dick's bush (where Noonan got killed in August) and Cambril.

I wonder how Eddie Roedel, Bill Myers and Ray Weaver made out as I have not heard from anyone in the regiment since I got initiated.

My wounds are all healed now and am waiting to be shipped to the states. Once there I can get treatment for my foot and also see some of my folks and friends.

Well, old top, I think I will ring off for this time, but will call up again. Let me hear from you as to how all the boys are at home and remember me to your folks and also my aunt.

Your friend and pal always,
JOE SILLS.

REMINDED "YANK" OF HOME

Georgia Soldier Delighted When He Found Real Cantaloupe in Ruined Town in France.

A fresh-faced, splendidly built lad looked up from the first bite of his melon, exclaiming: "Yes, sah, a cantaloupe, a honest-to-the-Lord cantaloupe. I never thought they'd heald of such a thing in France."

They explained to me, all talking at once, pouring out unasked military information till my hair rose up, scandalized, that this was their first experience with semierminal civilian life in France, because they belonged to the troops from Georgia—volunteers; that they had been in the front-line trenches at exactly such a place for probably so many weeks, where such and such things happened, and before that at such another place, where they were so many strong, etc., etc. "So we search, sah, we look to buy things till we struck this town. And, when I saw cantaloupe I mighty high dropped dead! I don't reckon I'm likely to run into a watermelon, am I? I surely would have to be called back to camp on a stretcher if I did!" He laughed out a boy's childish laughter. "But, sah, what do you call this? I guld fifty-five cents for this slice—yes, sah, fifty-five cents for a slice, and back home in Georgia you put a nickel for the biggest one in the lot!" He buried his face in the yellow fruit.

"Give me you like being in France?" asked the boy who was devouring the melon.

"He looked up, his eyes kindling. "Oh, I was plumb crazy to get back home. I'm dead, I like it mo' even I loved it would."

I looked at his fresh, unlined boy's cheeks, his clear, bright boy's eyes, and felt a great wave of pity. "You haven't been in active service yet?" I surmised.

Unconsciously, gayly, he flung my pity back in my face: "You bet yo' life I have. We've just come from the Champagne front and the service we saw there was such active. How about it, boys?"—Harper's Magazine.

Saw Spain's Start as Nation.

In the full historical and national sense Cordoba is the name of what is probably the most significant place in the world for Spain, who certainly regards it as such, and now to the utmost of her capacity celebrates the twelfth centenary of the great event that is associated with the beautiful little town that nestles on the sides of the Andalusian hills. The king and queen, all the dignitaries of the land, and the people in general joined in a great celebration. It was at Cordoba in 711, says the Madrid correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, that the Moorish hosts were thrown back and there took place the beginning of the great reconquest which gave Spain back to herself and started her as a nation. The Spaniards say definitely that their nationality dates from Cordoba in 711. This, evidently, is a good reason for great celebrations, and to some people it may seem well that at such a moment the nation and its leaders can completely detach their minds from the somewhat trivial circumstances of the present international political situation of the country. Nothing has been permitted to mar the success of this commemoration.

THE DOLT

By ARLINE A. MACDONALD.

Copyright, 1918, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

If Richard Doe had not been a poor dolt he would never have been a good soldier.

At least, so Richard himself expressed it in a letter that Abe Walton, the town clerk, received back home from "somewhere in France."

The young soldier had been the recipient of a number of congratulatory missives consequent upon a published account of his acts of heroism and daring on the western front. And the youth had read them modestly and had penned a solitary reply to Abe Walton at Kensington, knowing that Abe would take it in turn to the respective villagers. And Abe did.

Now young Doe had never become an eligible name in the village. Tall and handsome, he regularly joined the "lancers" on about the general store, working at nothing, and giving but little promise of ever doing anything else. He made a fit subject for the gossip of which there were many. Nevertheless, Richard Doe was always conscious that he possessed certain latent qualities which ought to be made patent. They needed only a time of trial to bring out their full and pliability. And the time came, and Ruth Walton was responsible for it.

Ruth was the only daughter of Abe Walton, and a teacher in the village school. She was a tall, slender girl, scarcely out of her teens, whose face was one of those quite as striking for its character as for its beauty.

She admired Doe, liked him for his sympathetic understanding of his fellow human beings, his sense of the dramatic, his untrammelled flow of words, which were the best perquisites of his friendship for a girl in her profession. Once he had reprieved her for overindulgence and had brusquely turned from Tom Whitney's proffered cigarette case. It was at the supper table that Ruth had said:

"Dick lacks the 'pep' that characterizes the modern young man. He does not smoke, he does not dance. He's too handsome to work. He's a dolt."

One day, in desperation, Doe decided that he would force the attention of the village upon his talent. He whispered something into the ear of Abe Walton, who had already given the youth a big corner in his own heart. The next morning he dropped quietly out of the village and the tongues of the gossip wagged furiously.

Mrs. H—, who never meddled with anyone's affairs, reminded the neighbors that a year before she had said that Richard Doe would turn up some day and would turn up later in a penitentiary. "As for Abe Walton," she declared, "he's played his cards to the hysteric influence of that infernal scoundrel."

It was true that Doe's departure gave Abe more energy. He quickly got a contract from a New York journalist for the erection of a pretentious stone mansion on the knoll adjoining his own homestead.

Time passed quickly at Kensington. Jane came and the robins piped their sweetest lay, and the odor of the rose and the honeysuckle stole through screened chamber windows. At the close of a balmy afternoon Ruth Walton sat alone in her own boudoir reading a war story which appeared in the newspaper.

Suddenly she remembered that there was a dance that evening in the pavilion. She arose, rushed her face, which seemed drawn and bloodless, and listened below to prepare the evening meal.

The dance had never seemed so pretty and overcrowded. Nell Whitney, in a flurry of excitement, made some complimentary remarks about Ruth's dress.

"Richard Doe is here," she said. "And oh, isn't it dreadful, Ruth," she gasped, "his left arm has been shot off!"

This was too much for Ruth. In the stupor which almost held her brain in thrall she heard a faint "Where's Ruth?" as she tottered to the road that led to Kensington knoll.

Her hands wavered; her knees shook at footsteps she knew only too well. "Go! Go back, Richard," she screamed. "Forgive me, I can't bear to look at you. Your arm!" she gasped. "It isn't as bad as you think, Ruth," catching her arm and trying to comfort her. "See?"

Deliberately he unbuttoned his frock, disclosing a whole arm suspended in a sling.

"Force of habit," he laughed as he buttoned his coat this time with the arm outside. His face glowed with a steady calm. A thrill of pleasure surmounted her being as once again he took her hand. A fresh June zephyr swept the fragrant pine across the knoll, where, sitting against the open sky, a starry moonlight bathed in a flood of silvery moonlight.

"It's yours, Ruth. I did it for you," he whispered.

A solitary tear of joy stood on the cheek of the girl, who hid her face on the breast of the man who some months before she had consigned to the scrap heap of character failures.

Gently he lifted her head, pushed back her loose tresses from her face and reverently kissed her.

Somewhere among the deeper shadows of a blue bush a pair of eyes over-stained and anxious, lit up with childish delight, and a ruddy face broadened into one protracted smile.

"Looks like there'll be a wonderful big time in Kensington some day," said Abe Walton.

What was it? How much he was worth.

Losses of Our Merchant Shipping.

From the beginning of the European war on August 3, 1914, to the armistice of November 11, 1918, the authenticated loss of American merchant vessels from acts of the enemy was 145 vessels of 254,470 gross tons, as shown by the official records of the bureau of navigation, department of commerce. These statistics do not include the losses of vessels of the American navy or of the American army and lives thus sacrificed recorded by the navy and war departments. They do not include several cases of the loss of merchant vessels in which it is not yet established whether the loss was due to acts of the enemy.

KINGSTON, N. Y., JAN. 3, 1919.

The editor of the Kansas City Star, a very daring person, ventures to express the hope that American girls, having put aside their knitting, will now begin learning to cook.

Again doubt is expressed as to whether the former Czar is dead, and certainly the curtain behind which afflicted Russia seethes in Bolshevik chaos is pretty nearly impenetrable.

Everything is lost, including honor," wails the Cologne Gazette. This is true in a sense not intended. There was nothing left of Germany's honor even at the end of the first half year of the war.

Not one soldier in the American army has been put to death for a military offense. While this is chiefly because our army was comparatively free of serious offenders, it may also be partly due to the fact that our military code is less stern than that of other nations.

The Germans are at last learning from the files of their own Foreign Office that the official German story of the cause of the war was utterly false. At the same time they are learning from evidence in trials in Switzerland reproduced in German papers that the worst charges of atrocities are true, including the employment of deadly bacilli cultures in enemy countries.

The "good authority" for the assertion that the President favored sinking the German fleet was doubtless a pro-German desirous of making trouble between the United States and England, for the only reason given for the President's alleged approval was that a division of the German ships would make England's navy bigger than ever.

Too many American editors glibly accepted the story that President Wilson demanded the sinking of the German fleet and wrote emphatic editorial disapproval only to learn—too late to withdraw their articles—that the President repudiated any such "foolish idea." The temptation of those hundreds of correspondents crowding France to seize upon wild rumors in the absence of facts is obvious, and the thing for sensible Americans to do is to read most careful correspondence with reservations and await official announcements where important matters are concerned.

THE GERMAN MIND

The German mind seems as incapable of logical reasoning as it is of entertaining a decent thought. Despite defeat in a war for which Germany had been 40 years preparing, begun by Germany at a time when, with the exception of the British Navy, nothing that the Allies possessed was prepared even for defense, the obtuse German mind is still incapable of an honest thought. Convicted of national crimes that would disgrace savages there is not the slightest sign of repentance or realization of guilt. Here is what Maximilian Harden, one of the few Germans who can think and see his people as others see them, says:

Fifty-one months of brutal rule in Belgium, where administrative unity was broken and raw materials, machinery, goods of every kind and three millions in cash and banknotes were carried away. All law was broken, forced labor imposed, civilians were deported, and at the eleventh hour industries were still destroyed and towns plundered.

The devastation of Northern France and the destruction of cathedrals, monuments, mines, factories and orchards.

Air raids against all law and all customs.

The sinking of passenger ships and hospital ships.

Secret agreements with the British and the Flemish.

The smothering of explosives, both in and out of the country.

Behind the sham front, the old officials at their old work and now presented with a silver smoking pipe as a reward of propaganda.

has cleaned out Hindenburg and Haase, Erzberger and Lodebour, Solf and Kautsky. That is the appearance of the much advertised revolution. Official language is unchanged. It is still the boast that the army is "undefeated," and as regards the approach of starvation, mentioned only to deceive us, where should starvation come from, since if the war went on, the last year's harvest must suffice until Spring?

There is no trace of repentance or of an attempt to separate the innocent from the guilty, nor can there be, because so many shavers in the guilt are partners in business.

One has only to talk with Germans at home to prove the truth of Harden's assertions. From these he will hear that Germany's army is still undefeated, that the Allies had better beware how they press Germany too far, and with all this the while over the lack of magnanimity displayed by the Allies in dealing with confessed murderers. Is it remarkable that there is a growing demand that only the utmost severity be used in dealing with Germany when the Germans make so plain their utter inability to appreciate or understand anything else?

LITTLE LAUGHS.

"Sapleugh is always thinking of himself." "Yes; in that way he avoids having much on his mind."—Boston Transcript.

Pullit (with a broken arm)—"It's awful not to be able to do any work while I'm laid up." "That's all right, my dear Mrs. Willney—your bones are knitting."—Life.

Jeff Vallery (a peevish loser, during the poker game)—"Seems to me you all spends a lot of time stacking up dem chips ob yours, Pete. Tryin' to delay de game?" Pete Pottle—"No, sah. Ah'm not Ah'm simply segregatin' de whites!"—Buffalo Express.

"So you think the Germans and the Russians can never agree?" "Yes. It's partly a matter of language difficulties. After a few questions have been translated from Russian into German and the answers have been translated from German into Russian there's bound to be a whole lot of misunderstanding."—Washington Star.

Men, Not Wine.

Senator Clark was congratulating himself on the gradual disappearance of the German language newspaper.

"We have so many citizens of German birth," he said, "that it is most essential to keep temptation out of their path. The German language newspaper is a temptation for them—a temptation to be traitorous."

"And these people are so many. Once in pre-war days on a liner a man seated next to me at table berked the steward and said:

"Steward, bring a bottle of Niemann with the fish, a bottle of Hogenheimer with the chicken, and with the pudding a bottle of Renner."

"Beg pardon, sir," the steward interrupted. "This is the wine card. What you've got there, sir, is the passenger list."

The Ideal Son.
The fussy old gentleman asked: "Have you any children, sir?"

"Yes, sir, a son."

"Ah, indeed? Does he smoke?" "No, sir, he never so much as touched a cigarette."

"So much the better, sir; the use of tobacco is a poisonous habit. Does he frequent clubs?"

"He has never put his foot in one."

"Allow me to congratulate you. Does he never come home late?"

"Never. He goes to bed directly after dinner."

"A model young man, sir, a model young man. How old is he?"

"Just six months."—Philadelphia Record.

Favorable Conditions.
A commercial traveler went into a country store in a backwoods district one pleasant day recently. After securing his order, he remarked to the proprietor that they were having a great time over in Europe.

"That was asked the storekeeper," "Why, yes, a great fight," replied the proprietor.

"Well, they're not good weather for it, ain't they?" was the reply. Binghamton Republican.

CZECHO-SLAVS NEAR VIENNA

By Telegram to The Freeman.
Geneva, Jan. 3.—Czecho-Slav troops are marching towards Vienna and have cut communication between the Austrian and Hungarian capitals. They have entered Pressburg, only 37 miles from Vienna, according to information received here today. Riots have broken out in Budapest and the city is in a panic.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

Don't worry about what the world thinks of you. The world has several billions of other people to think about.

An idle rumor always gains currency, which is more than can be said of an idea.

TEMPTING SALADS.

There are few dishes more economical than salads well made, as they use a variety of foods, with a good salad dressing, making a most wholesome dish.

There is an important thing to remember when using olive oil, it must be good or the salad will be ruined. Many people have had their taste spoiled for French or a mayonnaise dressing because rancid or inferior oil has been used. Such a prejudice is hard to overcome, more's the pity, for oil dressing is so delicious that it is a crime not to be able to enjoy it.

Cheese and Pea Salad.—Take a quarter of a pound of cream cheese, one can of peas, two small onions, three sweet pickles, three sour pickles, some crisp lettuce, half a cupful of chopped nuts, and all mixed together with a good salad dressing.

Pineapple, Cheese and Nut Salad.—Take slices of pineapple from the can, fill the centers with grated cheese, cover with French dressing and sprinkle with chopped nuts and parsley. To make French dressing, the amount of vinegar or lemon juice is varied to suit the character of the salad. A salad which is acid will need but little added to the oil. One tablespoonful of lemon juice to three of olive oil, salt and paprika or red pepper to taste, with occasional use of onion juice, a pinch of mustard or white pepper.

Salmon Salad.—Take one can of salmon, four cold boiled potatoes, three sweet pickles, two cupfuls of cabbage finely chopped and any desired dressing. Cut the potatoes and pickles into small pieces and mix with the salmon which has been flaked and the bones removed; mix with a good boiled dressing.

Dainty Chicken Salad.—To one cupful of cold cooked chicken cut in small pieces, add one cupful of walnut meats, one cupful of peas and a cupful of mayonnaise dressing and a few chopped olives. Mix and arrange on crisp lettuce leaves. Garnish with olives.

EAST SWINGING INTO LINE

Famous "Road to Mandalay" Rapidly Becoming Dotted With Industrial Plants of All Sorts.

The whirl of the loom and constant hum of industrial machinery are fast drowning the softer noises of the East, "from Rangoon to Mandalay."

Here, in the very section that Kipling made familiar to the world more than a generation ago, when he described the mystic charm of India, manufacturing communities have sprung up that make the banks of the rivers resemble those of the Merrimac in New England, writes a correspondent.

Burma girls such as waited for the British soldier, are still here, but most of them are working in shops.

The annual report of the Indian factories act committee for 1917 shows there are 324 factories registered, with 68,435 persons employed.

Rice mills predominate, as might be expected. There are 329 of these, with 108 sawmills, six petroleum refineries, 13 cotton-ginning mills, 15 oil mills, eight shops for making printing presses, seven brass and iron factories and many others.

Rangoon, Mandalay and Moumein—three of the important manufacturing towns of the district, have been mentioned. They have high sanitary standards and many of the conventionalities that mark the prosperous European or American industrial community.

Modern India has her child labor laws. Women have supplanted children in most of the mills and few children under fourteen are employed.

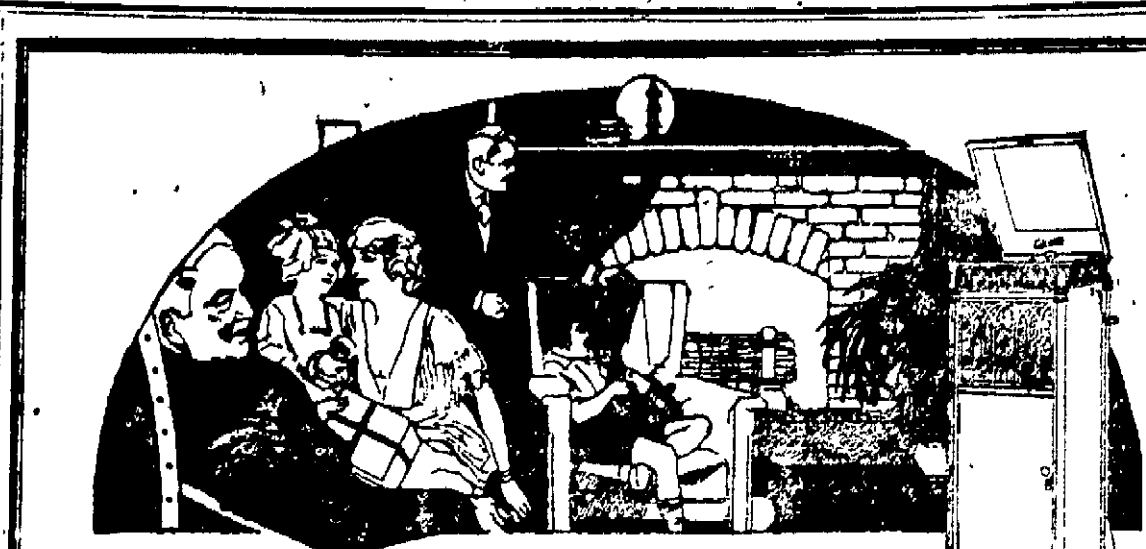

Wages have not varied much in the last year, but even here, India is fast approaching Western communities. Most of the workers are seeking more pay and an increase is deemed likely in a few months.

War Deafness.
War deafness may be caused by injury to the ear, or simply by the force of concussion. In many cases there are general nervous affections. "By the force of the explosion," writes Dr. J. Gordon Wilson in the Journal of the American Medical Association, "the soldier may have been blown violently against the parapet or wall of the dugout, or hurled for some distance through the air or struck by debris from the destruction of neighboring buildings. One man describes it as a soft, irresistible force pushing him up against the parapet wall close to which he was standing when the shell burst in the trench. As a result of explosions men may be hurried for varying periods, and this has a bearing on the case. In a great number of cases the concussion bursts the eardrum. Frequently mental effects are complicated and a man imagines that he is deaf."

The treatment is repairing whatever wounds there may be. The deafness is usually temporary and hearing is gradually brought back.

Labor After the War. By Samuel Gompers.

THE NEW EDISON IS A VITAL FACTOR IN THE NATION'S LIFE

The New Edison is a refining influence; it really enriches the life of the family which owns it. Unlike talking machines and other devices, which merely imitate music, it actually Re-Creates the singer's voice. And it does it so faithfully that no human ear can distinguish between artist and instrument. The famous Edison tone tests have proved this to more than 2,000,000 people.

As a result one never tires of it. The novelty never wears off, any more than the novelty wears off Paggiacci, Aida or any other great opera.

Music is one of life's greatest resources. And in the New Edison you have music—the world's greatest music, interpreted by the world's greatest artists. Not an imitation, you understand, but a Re-Creation. And never was the solace of music more needed than now—in this time of stress and anxiety.

Don't figure the money spent on a New Edison as an expense. It's a profitable investment. It keeps you and your family at home where you don't spend money.

Wages have not varied much in the last year, but even here, India is fast approaching Western communities. Most of the workers are seeking more pay and an increase is deemed likely in a few months.

War Deafness.
War deafness may be caused by injury to the ear, or simply by the force of concussion. In many cases there are general nervous affections. "By the force of the explosion," writes Dr. J. Gordon Wilson in the Journal of the American Medical Association, "the soldier may have been blown violently against the parapet or wall of the dugout, or hurled for some distance through the air or struck by debris from the destruction of neighboring buildings. One man describes it as a soft, irresistible force pushing him up against the parapet wall close to which he was standing when the shell burst in the trench. As a result of explosions men may be hurried for varying periods, and this has a bearing on the case. In a great number of cases the concussion bursts the eardrum. Frequently mental effects are complicated and a man imagines that he is deaf."

The treatment is repairing whatever wounds there may be. The deafness is usually temporary and hearing is gradually brought back.

THE RUBY RING

By ALICIA BOCKELMAN.

(Copyright, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

"If I could only have a ruby ring," sighed Margaret Kendall, "but father and mother seem determined to give me something else."

She was sitting on the front porch with flushed cheeks and an angry scowl clouded her beautiful face. She pushed aside her curly, black hair, which the wind would blow in her eyes to irritate her still more.

"Margaret," a voice called from up stairs, "you had better dry your tears and look cheerful!"

"Oh, mother, how can I be happy when you will not give me what I want for a graduation present," fretted Margaret.

"Child enough of that foolishness. You have several rings already—enough for any girl of your age. A ruby ring? No, indeed, you shall not have it."

"I didn't want a gold wrist watch, mother."

"Why, Margaret, you have been asking for one all along until this new idea of a ruby ring came into your head. Whatever—"

"Why doesn't father buy me one?" interrupted Margaret.

"Father has already bought you a pearl pendant. But, Margaret, my dear, it is four o'clock and you have never once thought of Aunt Mehtabel. She will be waiting at the station for you!" exclaimed Mrs. Kendall.

"Dear me! I wish Aunt Mehtabel would forget to come to my graduation," complained Margaret, going to the garage.

As she drove up the street Mrs. Kendall breathed a sigh of relief. "Well, she is off at last. If Margaret would only like Aunt Mehtabel!"

In a few minutes Margaret was at the station as the train was disappearing around Atlantic Hill. She was jumping out of the machine when Charlie Montgomery hurried up to the station curb.

"Why, Charlie," she asked, "what are you doing here?"

"Oh, I was to meet two of my college chums on leave from camp," he panted. "Are you to meet someone, too?"

"More likely someone is waiting for me," replied Margaret. "Oh, Charlie, look at Aunt Mehtabel arguing with one of the porters. Do you remember her?"

"Of course, I do," laughed Charlie; "but look at my friends, the young Lieutenants, witnessing the parley!"

The lady pair rushed up to the newcomers and after valuations, introductions and apologies Aunt Mehtabel and Margaret were handed into their auto and had started homeward.

"Land's sake, child, why were you so late?" scolded the tired traveler.

"I delayed to tease mother to give me a ruby ring for graduation, but she won't," confessed her designing niece.

"Ruby ring—stuff and nonsense!" cried Aunt Mehtabel.

It was graduation night. Margaret was putting the last touches to her pretty gown, when a warning call from downstairs told her it was time she was ready.

"Just a moment," she answered, taking another survey of herself.

Being satisfied she snatched up her outer garments and sped downstairs. Aunt Mehtabel was waiting for her in the lower hall.

"Margaret, here is a useful present for you," she said solemnly, handing her youthful kinswoman a book. Margaret glanced at its title, "Household Arts."

"That—thank you very much, Aunt. You are—so kind," she stammered.

The graduation exercises were about to begin. Margaret heard her name called softly. Turning around, she saw Charlie in a soldier's uniform.

"Come," he said quickly, "come a little way from the door. I have something to say to you."

Margaret followed him, somewhat bewildered.

"I have been ordered to Camp Onondaga and wish to say good-by. I would like to have you accept this little gift from me as a keepsake."

Charlie drew a small box from his pocket, pressed the spring, and Margaret saw—a ruby ring!

"What, how?" began Margaret, astonished.

"Oh, don't hesitate to take it. Your Aunt Mehtabel told me what I might give you," he pleaded.

"It is just what I wanted, but I didn't think it would come from you. I shall wear it as a talisman. But you will come back from camp soon," she added, anxiously.

"Not until I've been 'over there,'" Charlie answered, smilingly. There was no smile on Margaret's face and all the light went out of her eyes.

"You will write?" he asked.

"Yes," she said, putting her hand to his outstretched one. They were parting, perhaps never to meet again in this world—as he blessed her reverently.

The opening ceremonies of the grand march were being held and Margaret was back to her place and whispered to a little group of her dearest friends.

"What do you think my new gift is?"

"What?" came the questioning chorus.

"A ruby ring," she answered, with a sob in her voice.

Private conversation. Margaret's eyes were on the floor. And so the tale he related there was not for publication.

THE BOY THAT WAS

When the hair about the temples starts to show the signs of gray, and a fellow realizes that he's wandering far away from the pleasures of his boyhood and his youth and never more will know the joy of laughter as he did in years of yore, Oh, it's then he starts to thinking of a stubby little lad with a face as brown as berries and a soul supremely glad.

When a gray-haired dreamer wanders down the lanes of memory, and forgets the thing present for the time of "used-to-be," He takes off his shoes and stockings, and he throws his coat away.

And he's free from all restrictions save the rules of manly play. He may be in tattered garments, but he's free from the sun, he forgets his proud successes and the riches he has won.

Oh, there's not a man that liveth but would give his all to be the stubby little fellow that in dream-land he can see.

And the splendors that surround him and the joys about him spread.

Only seem to rise to haunt him with the boyhood lust has fled.

When the hair about the temples starts to show Time's silver stain, Then the richest man's that living years to be a boy again.

—Edgar A. Guest in Detroit Free Press.

Thomas Jefferson Rodman Said to Have Been Father of Big Gun Used in Europe

Thomas Jefferson Rodman, the American inventor and ordnance expert, who initiated the movement for big guns which culminated in the giant cannon used in Europe, was born 103 years ago in Salem, Ind., and after graduation from West Point, entered the ordnance department of the army. He early devoted himself to experiments with guns and gunpowder. Rodman's greatest triumph, notes a writer in the Sacramento Union, was the invention of a method of casting guns hollow and cooling them from the inside, which worked a revolution in the making of artillery.

The long and earnest study devoted to the properties and manipulation of cast iron, then regarded as the best material for heavy ordnance, by Rodman and other officers, resulted in the United States to produce guns then considered the best in the world. In 1860 a cannon weighing 25 tons, the largest in the world, was cast, but the exigencies of the Civil war required a heavier and better artillery. In 1862 a 20-inch smooth bore, weighing nearly 38 tons and throwing a solid shot of 1,900 pounds was cast. This great gun attracted international attention, and many years passed before it was surpassed in size and effectiveness.

Rodman also introduced the use of "muzzle-loading" powder for the French muzzle-loading guns of his time, and during the Civil war his guns were used in both navy and army and were of great assistance in deciding the outcome of the struggle. During the war period Rodman had command of the Watertown arsenal.

THIS AND THAT

Now that it is all over we have the added joy of knowing that the right side triumphed. A brunette never can understand what men see in blonde hair to rave about. It makes no difference how rich a man is, he's either a good fellow or he isn't. Prejudice keeps many a man away from a good friend.

Raising of Rabbits Grows in Popularity as Cost of Beef and Pork Increases

Since the price of meat has been soaring, substitutes for beef and pork have been in demand. The most popular method of filling out the menu without patronizing the butcher is to raise rabbits, and hundreds of persons are now so engaged with profit.

It is the consensus of opinion among breeders, writes a correspondent, that the Flemish giant rabbit is the best, its meat closely resembling the taste of chicken. Many persons who have served Flemish rabbit have been complimented over their "lovely chicken dinner."

The Belgian hare, which has many followers, is not so toothsome by far. The Flemish is bred for meat and weight, while the Belgian is favored for color, symmetry and small-sized bones.

The weight of rabbits varies greatly. The giant Flemish leads, specimens being known to reach 22 pounds, although the average ranges from 15 to 19. Belgian hares, when a year old, weigh about 12 pounds. The other species are somewhat lighter.

Rabbit hides bring 25 to 35 cents a pound, although there are instances where the white fur brings much higher prices according to quality and appearance.

Letters on Submarines.

The letters used on United States submarines designate their type of construction, and run through the alphabet. Submarines of the earlier types are designated by the first letter of the alphabet and those of later type by letters further along. Individual submarines are designated by numbers. Thus the designation NC means a certain submarine of the N type.

HOW BRAVE SONS OF
NEW ZEALAND HELPED MOTHER COUNTRY.
—War imposes many sacrifices upon a nation engaged in it, and civilian life necessarily is disturbed. The United States will have to share with other belligerents the inconvenience incident to the conflict. But if anyone is inclined to feel discomforted, he should take the trouble to note what has been done by New Zealand since the beginning of hostilities. That dominion, though, under no legal obligation to aid England, has raised an army of more than 100,000 men. Her population is 1,500,000.

Since New Zealand has had a compulsory service law, she has drafted a large number of married men both with and without children. The dominion has raised $120,000,000 in domestic war loans. A finance act was recently adopted which empowers the government to levy on salaries amounting to more than $7,500 a year, and to take drawing and fast-reducing measures in order to raise money. Maori tribes have uncomplainingly furnished large quotas of men to the army. The whole country, in short, was determined to help vigorously to carry the war to a successful finish.

Canada and Australia have been no less unselfish in supporting the war. The whole-hearted and entirely voluntary exertions of the British dominions furnish an inspiring example to the American people. When Canada, Australia, and New Zealand made such sacrifices for Great Britain, Americans might even more cheerfully endure hardships for their own country. When any "squal-ing" is heard, it is not from our brave young men or their families. It is from those who are horried at the prospect of giving up a few luxuries.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

PLAN LEAGUE OF VETERANS

How Soldiers in Great War Help to Perfect an Organization of All Arms

A movement seeking to bring under one great organization, the rank and file of the armies and navies of the nations allied against the central powers, has been started in Boston under the name of the Legion of Allied Veterans of the Great War. The organization has a charter from the state of Massachusetts and has established headquarters in Boston, with Sergt. H.
E. Pheneey, late of the Canadian expeditionary forces, as legion commander.

According to Sergeant Pheneey, the object of the organization closely resembles that of the Grand Army of the Republic, which brought together the veterans of the names of the United States at the close of the Civil war and which still continues. It is the desire of the leaders of the legion to promote good fellowship, fraternity and mutual welfare, and to assist those veterans in need of aid. It is declared that the legion is without political aspirations or propaganda, and that it has the endorsement of officers of the army and navy of the United States. Similar support is expected to be received from officials of other allied nations.

Why Mangin Called a Halt.
Soldiers have no illusions. They believe in blunt facts, and General Man-gin is no exception to the rule. A story is told of him by an artist from the Latin quarter of Paris.
The artist was commissioned to paint the general's portrait, and, as there was no other place available, he visited the general in his dugout for the first sitting.

After he had sketched in a rough,
bold outline of Mangin's severe, square features, he was asked by his sitter to hand over the sketch before proceeding.

"Ah, that's perfect," said General Mangin, "perfect! Don't touch it again.
If you do, you'll flatter me!"

How "Silent Drill" Is Done.
The battalion drill is, of course, the great display feature at the United States disciplinary barracks at Fort Leavenworth. When a prisoner is promoted to membership in the battalion he discards the numbered prison uniform for one which is hardly distinguishable from that of a regular soldier. Members of the "honored committee," which is self-governing, wear special stars on their breasts. They drill in a field near the prison, the line of impressive square is the "silent drill," which includes marching and rapid march at arms without spoken commands.—Red Cross Magazine.

Why Compass Is Well Protected.
One of the safest places in the war airplane is given to the compass, for without it and the sunman who is flying, the plane is lost. Great attention is paid by American pilots training in England to the compass. The compass is "drifted" if an airplane starts to fly from one point to another and ends up there in a wide loop. It is not a hard matter, but it must take that element into consideration by altering the compass course, before ascending, according to the total distance of the journey.

Couldn't Understand It.

caught like you."
"What was the matter with you, son?
Dedicated or something?"

SUBURBAN NEWS.

Hurley Crossroads.
Mr. and Mrs. Grandville Davis have gone on an extended visit to Haddonfield, N. J.
Irving Bush spent Christmas with his sister.
Mrs. John Lacher and daughter spent Christmas with her father, J. H. Walton.
Miss Frey of Elmendorf Cottage (called now the Baby Farm) is very thankful for kindnesses shown to her during quarantine Christmas time.
Admiral Higginson, Mr. Sipperley and W. Walton. The admiral has been out several times and each time brought some things, good warm clothing, hats, shoes, and food, but not least, a fine Christmas tree, all of which the little tots are enjoying.
Miss Jane Elmendorf is visiting at S. F. Ten Eyck at Hurley.
Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Cure of Kingston attended the exercises at School Dist. No. 3 Tuesday. Exercises were excellent and a good attendance in spite of rain and mud.
Miss Ruby Cure, our teacher, spent her Christmas vacation at Pine Hill.
Fred Auchmoody's baby is seriously ill.
The people of this place enjoyed the Christmas exercises and refreshments at Hurley church very much.
Visitors at the Elmendorf Home-stead Christmas were Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Smodes of West Hurley, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lasher and sons, Joseph and Sherwood, of Kingston, and Mrs. Jane Elmendorf and Miss Inez Topping.
Miss Kelson and assistant have been out to the Baby Farm and brought Christmas to the little ones from the Children's Welfare Society.
Miss Frey wishes to thank Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wood for the many kindnesses done during this quarantine.
Maple Hill.
John S. Sullivan is visiting friends in Bridgeport and New York city.
Miss Margaret and Jordan and sister, Mae, are spending the holidays with their mother and brother in this place.
Edward Bradley, after spending the holidays at his home here, has returned to Walden, where he has employment.
Fred Hiltbrand of Connecticut is spending the holidays with friends in this vicinity.

SOCIETY NOTES.

Clyde Van Steenburgh's dancing class in Pythian Hall last evening suffered little from the downfall of snow as the usual large crowd was in attendance.
Mr. and Mrs. Harry Streeter gave a New Year's dinner in honor of the engagement of Mrs. Streeter's brother, Harry, to Miss Helen Lang of this city. Dainty refreshments were also served at the event. Guests present were Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Streeter of 107 Downs street, and Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Streeter of 223 Smith avenue.
The engagement of Miss Margaret LeFevre, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. LeFevre of New Paltz, to Roy Dennison of Walkkill was announced at the annual Christmas tree of the N. H. M. Club of New Paltz. The engagement of Miss Bertha LeFevre, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abram P. LeFevre of New Paltz, to Eugene Dennison of Walkkill is also announced.
On New Year's Eve the Misses Clara and Theda Miller of Downs street were given a party by a number of their friends. The evening was spent in playing games, after which dainty refreshments were served. The guests departed in the small hours of the new year, voting the Misses Miller royal entertainers. Those present were the Misses Laura and Nellie Fields, Pearl Smith, Winifred Low, Marjorie Tillson, Lillian Sherwood, Gertrude Byrne, Clara Saulpaugh, Ruth Satterlee, Vera Van Steenburgh, Maude Dudley, Theda and Clara Miller, and the Messrs. Kenneth Evory, Max Oppenheimer, Ralph Longyear, Edward Richards, Edward Leverette, John Garon, Lawrence Jordan and George Walters.
Trowbridge-Lee.
Blanche M. Lee of 186 Foxhall avenue and Charles G. Trowbridge, of 79 Foxhall avenue, were quietly married at the parsonage of the Clinton Avenue M. E. Church, by the Rev. Mr. Cranston, on Tuesday evening December 31.
Curt-Hartman.
On New Year's afternoon at 2 o'clock at St. Joseph's Church a very pretty wedding took place when John Curt of this city and Nora Hartman, also of this city, were united in marriage by the Rev. John J. Bridy. The bride looked very pretty dressed in white satin and a veil trimmed with orange blossoms. Miss Agnes Hartman, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid and was dressed in delicate pink silk with gold trimmings and a picture hat. The bride's gift to the bridegroom was a ring. The groom presented the best man, Dennis J. Murphy, with a scarf pin. The couple went on a trip, south as far as Miami, Florida, stopping off at all points of interest on the way. They will reside in this city on their return home.

Substitute for Putty.

A cheap substitute for putty, suitable for stopping cracks in floors and other woodwork, is made by soaking newspaper in a paste made by boiling a pound of flour in three quarts of water and adding a teaspoonful of alum. Force this mixture into the cracks with a knife.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL

By Telegraph to The Freeman.
New York, Jan. 3.—Although there were mixed changes in the stock market at the opening today the tone was strong with the petroleum stocks again in demand at advancing prices. Mexican Petroleum swung over a wide range, first dropping 2½ points to 186½ and then advancing rapidly to 196. Texas Oil advanced 1½ to 189½ and an advance of over 2 points was made in Pan-American. Speculative interest was concentrated to a great extent in Sinclair, which advanced ¾ to 35½. Pierce Oil and Texas Oil rights both made substantial gains. Brooklyn Rapid Transit fell to 20½, then rallied to 21. Steel Common advanced from 95½ to 96½. Marine Preferred advanced ½ to 112½. The railroad stocks were active, with Southern Pacific up 1½ to 137½, and Texas Pacific up 1½ to 33½.

Trading continued active during the forenoon. The oils reacted moderately after the violent advances, with Mexican Petroleum, after selling up to a new high record of 196, dropping to 192½. Texas Pacific again developed strength, moving up 2½ points to 38½. Southern Pacific rose 1½ in all to 137½ while Steel Common reacted from 95½ to 96. Tobacco stocks were active, Cigar Stores selling up to 109½.

Antique Furniture.

Those who possess pieces of antique furniture should devote personal attention to them, and especially to any of old oak, which should be kept in condition by periodical rubbings with flannel dipped in a mixture of beeswax, oil and spirits of turpentine. White painted French furniture is best cleaned with paraffin.

The G. A. R. of Old Veterans, Tappan Camp, No. 1, Sons of Veterans, Ladies' Auxiliary, No. 59, of one of Veterans, will have joint luncheon at their rooms, 635 Broadway, on Tuesday night, January 7, for members only. Refreshments will be served.

ABOUT THE FOLKS.

Archie Winter, the veteran expressman, is still confined to his home on Broadway by illness.
Edward L. Merritt of Brooklyn, formerly in charge of the uptown Freeman office on Fair street, is confined to the home of his sister in Brooklyn with an infection of blood poisoning in his hand. His many friends in this city will be glad to know that Mr. Merritt is up for the first time Tuesday and is gradually improving.

High School P. T. A.

On Wednesday evening, January 8, the Parent-Teachers' Association of Kingston High School will hold its regular monthly meeting. The paper for the evening will be given by a teacher from the English department and the subject, one of vital importance at the beginning of this great world reconstruction period, is "The Home and the Future Citizen." Every high school teacher and the parents of every high school student are asked to remember the date of this meeting and to make a special effort to be present.

THE CURE

By ROSE NEYMAN.

(Copyright, 1919, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Slam! Bang! The door to the private office of Jack Willard closed with a bang. The pretty blond stenographer winked sagely across to the bookkeeper and her fingers began to work on the typewriter keys with great dexterity. "I guess young Mr. Willard's temper is getting the best of him," she said smiling.

"Miss Felton!" came from the office of Jack Willard in a sharp, impatient voice. Timidly the little dark-haired private secretary stepped into the office, closing the door after her. "Miss Felton, it is very essential that these letters be copied before you go home today."

Falteringly Gladys took the great batch of letters and went out of the office. A sudden thought of rebellion swept over her. As if she could flush those letters before five o'clock! It meant that she would have to work overtime, and oh how she had planned so very much on going to the ball tonight, that wonderful ball, which was the talk of the town. And her mother, too, would feel sorry after she had worked so hard to finish her dress. Some men were so selfish. He might have left a few of the letters for tomorrow. Well, it had to be done, so Gladys set about to accomplish the task before her.

As she worked she thought of her employer. He needed a good lesson. He was selfish when there was much work to be done. She would teach him to consider other people besides himself. The time flew by as if on wings. Half-past four! The stenographer closed up her machine with a bang. "Going to the ball, Gladys?" she asked as she passed her desk. "Sorry you won't be there, it's going to be some affair," Gladys wished her a pleasant time and kept on working. The stenographer sauntered out of the office, throwing up her hands in relief at the door of the private office where her employer was apparently still at work.

Half past five, 6, 6:30 and 7 o'clock passed and Gladys still worked. Suddenly a smile overspread her countenance. She had an idea. She would teach Mr. Willard a lesson. About ten letters were still left to be finished. When she had finished the last letter it was eight o'clock.

Suddenly she uttered a moan and fell back in her chair. In a moment the bookkeeper and Mr. Willard were at her side. Mr. Willard dismissed the bookkeeper with a curt: "I'll take care of her." After the bookkeeper had gone she heard him murmur tenderly: "Poor little girl" and "Oh, what a brute I am." He raised a cup of water to her lips and her eyelids fluttered open. Weakly she said: "I am feeling better now," in answer to his anxious query. She made no protest when he telephoned for a taxi-cab and offered to escort her home.

Twenty minutes later the taxi arrived and he almost carried her into the car. She murmured something about the letters and he ungraciously replied: "Hang the letters. They'll be attended to later."

In the cab Gladys found her employer so considerate and tender that she wondered how she had ever thought him otherwise. He continually asked her if she was comfortable, etc. Gladys was almost glad that she had not gone to the ball. She smiled to herself. The ruse was working successfully.

When they arrived at her home he offered to assist her into the house. Left Gladys protested, so he contented himself in giving her advice such as to be sure to retire at once and to rest.

On his way home Jack culled himself everything he could think of. What a brute he had been to make the poor little girl work so hard. He had never noticed before that his little secretary was so good looking. He had always regarded her as being a good asset to his business rather than a young and pretty girl. Well, he would make it up to her now.

In her home, Gladys found her mother waiting anxiously for her. Gladys burst into a fit of laughter as she told her mother of her ruse. As she proceeded to relate she laughingly said: "Remember, mother, I am to be ill. I'm going to make Jack Willard regard me as a human being and not as a machine."

The next day Gladys received a beautiful bouquet of flowers from Jack, and later in the day found him at her home. He apologized for being the cause of her illness and blamed his "confounded selfishness." The visit continued for many days. Gladys did not mind being ill and visited constantly by her employer, in whom she was becoming very much interested. She rather liked it. It also seemed that Jack enjoyed his visits to his confidential secretary.

One evening Gladys herself noticed her employer, as she was now fully recovered. After Jack had gone (for it was he who called) a shining diamond ring on the third finger of her left hand was the impression left of his visit. Gladys confided to her mother that night that the date for the great day was not very far away.

After they were married Gladys confessed to her husband the ruse of which he had been a victim. At first he made a pretense of being angry, but then, talking her tenderly into his arms, he said: "I'm glad you did that, dear, because you opened my eyes to my selfishness, and through the old dearest little wife in the world."

Unmistakable.

"Did you hear about the delicate little Mr. Stanglote last night?"

"No, what was it?"

"Well, I don't know what looking at the clock and other familiar devices were of no avail, so she ordered some refreshments and her mother sat in a dish of breakfast food."

To Sew for Belgian Children.

Mrs. Hayes's class will meet this evening in the Red Cross work rooms at 7 o'clock to sew on underwear for the Belgian children. Work has been received that if these garments were finished by January 25 millions of Belgians would be saved. The women of Kingston who have an extra hour to spare are asked to come to the Red Cross work rooms and assist with the sewing.

Sleigh Belts in Evidence.

The realization of the new year is plainly evident today with the cheerful jingle of the sleigh bells. Quite a few sleighs were seen on the uptown streets today and "Let's catch a bob" was again the popular cry of the school children at the noon recess.

Officers elect Wortman, Brimmer and Cornwell are in the army in France, and a committee was appointed to arrange for a grand reception to be given upon their return. Assistant Foreman Richter will be in charge of the company until Foreman Wortman returns.

OUR DAILY PATTERN.

2234—A Simple, Practical Apron. Gingham, seersucker, percale, drill, linen and linen are good for this style. The apron is adjusted on the shoulder and the fulness at the waistline may be held by the belt, if desired.

The pattern is cut in 4 sizes: Small (32-34); medium (36-38); large (40-42); and extra large (44-46) inches bust measure. Size medium requires 4 1/2 yards of 36-inch material.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps by the Pattern Department, The Freeman, Rondout, N. Y. Be sure to state size wanted.

Catalogue Notice.
Send 10 cents in silver or stamps for our up-to-date fall and winter 1918-1919 catalogue, containing 550 designs of ladies', misses' and children's patterns, a concise and comprehensive article on dressmaking, also some points for the needle (illustrating 30 of the various, simple stitches) all valuable hints to the home dressmaker.

First Cake Sale of Year.
So far as the Freeman has any record, the young ladies of the Westminster Guild of the Rondout Presbyterian Church will hold the first cake sale in this city, in 1919, tomorrow, Saturday afternoon, at the home of Miss Katherine O. Van Kuren, 310 Broadway, from 2:30 to 5 o'clock. They are prepared to sell much excellent home baked cake to their many friends.

Dance at Stone Ridge.
The regular weekly dance will be held at the Stone Ridge Grange Hall Friday evening, January 3d.

Why Army Likes Motor Kitchens.
Feeding soldiers is an important matter, and the problems it presents have interested many of our inventors.

The traveling kitchen, run by motor power, is a very natural product of the times. There are several types. The kitchen, with its big kettles, large enough to cook food for 250 men at one operation, is mounted upon an automobile truck, which can also carry reserve supplies to feed 250 additional men.

For the chauffeur a protected cab is provided in front and the cook may attend to his work in the kitchen even while the truck is moving from place to place, by standing upon a step in the rear. To prevent his being jolted off on rough roads a hand rail has been provided to which he can hold.

HEAVIER FROCKS IN FASHION

Military Service Coats Among the Leading Favorites—Velours, Serges and Velvets Are Worn in the House.

New York.—The zero hour may have ended for the army, but it sends a shiver of memory, and prospect through us. Rentless houses, icy streets and thin clothes served to reduce our vitality so seriously last winter that there are many medical experts to rise up and say that the devastation of influenza was due to these causes.

We were frozen by nature, fed on substitutes, made miserable by lack of artificial heat, and our nervous resistance, which was called into intense activity to withstand these three plagues, has permitted us to fall easy victims to the fourth and the worst plague that leaped upon us from the ocean last autumn.

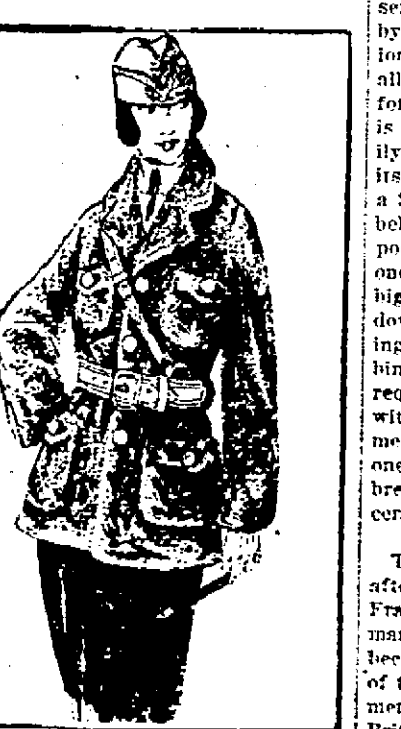

The war is over, but the cold approaches. The soldiers need not fear the zero hour, but the American women must fear it, warns a prominent fashion correspondent. It may be that we will get up cold and go to bed cold. We may eat half-warm meals in front of half-hear d fires, and have our being in one small room, with a total disregard of the pleasanter amenities of life that civilization has led us to believe are permanent.

This is not pessimism. It is a retrospect of actualities. None of us escaped suffering last year. The rich and the poor went down alike under the presence of intense cold and lack of coal, just as clean and dirty, wealthy and pauper went down under the influenza germ. None were spared the presence of danger last year. The multimillionaire lived in one room and tried to heat it with whatever sticks and stones she could buy or borrow, in the same comfortless way as her sister of the submerged tenth.

Warmth Is the Fashion.
Let us say that it is the fashion to wear warm clothes, and the individual will follow the fashion as the customs of a country follow its flag. We move in herds, and all the civilization in the world has not been able to eradicate this primordial instinct. So when you go out to buy your winter outfit, say to yourself that warmth is the fashion; that protection to the body by proper apparel is smart; that peltry, velours, quilted things, high shoes, big neckpieces, muffs for the hands, and even foot warmers for the feet, are the very height of style.

To dress in transparent clothes is to show one's self behind the times. To wear negligible costume that half covers the body at three o'clock, during a blizzard, is to show one's self unobservant of the rules of the game.

And not only must we wear warm clothes on the street, but they may be necessary for the house. In fact, it is very probable that they will be. There is small doubt about it under the new fuel request, which is that every room shall have a thermometer, and that not a single thermometer in America shall go above 68 degrees. Now, you're not used to 68 degrees in the house. Many of us are used to 50, and the majority of us will shiver for the first few weeks under the new regulation. We may take as our only comfort that fact that this temperature is supposed to be beautiful; but, mind you, it is only healthy when the body is warm. No medical expert, however great, will try to convince you otherwise.

Therefore, the clothes that are to be chosen for the house, as well as those for the street, must be protective. And because of this new ruling, which comes through the federal regulations, there is an entire output of new types of house gowns that we once thought impossibly old fashioned for American women.

Warm Medieval Blouse.
It is an old story to talk about France and the medieval costume blouse, but it is a rather new story in America. Those who preached this doctrine of dress last year were not regarded as sincere prophets, and would not go into the explanation of the thick cuirass blouse until this autumn, after France had had eight months of steady usage of the idea.

Now we are quite enamored of the whole scheme of dress. The necessity for being warm has brought about the necessity for wearing something in the house and in the street that is more protection than a wash shirtwaist.

Georgette crepe, Chinese silk, handkerchief linen are not aids to heat in the house, and even though we may wear coats with our skirts indoors as well as in the open, we like the protection of these new padded blouses, that are made of chambray, matelasse, quilted satin or brocade, interlined with flannel. It is only under the fur coat or the short jacket made of leather and sheepskin that we can stand the thinness of the conventional wash waist, which has given us the best service for nearly two decades.

The cuirass blouse puts many a separate skirt into first fashion, and that is a bit of economy that every woman likes to endorse; but more than that, it gives a snug security against the wind and the snow, as well as the chill of a sixty-eight-degree sitting room. It is an ornate substitute for the sweater.

Service Coats for Women.
Those who design clothes are not averse to a new output to meet new fuel laws. They are quite happy to supply women with a variant on the accepted style of winter costume. They have rung so many changes on chiffon and satin, on crepe and serge, that they are willing to go in for velours and angora, for skirts of heavy velveteen. They quite endorse the idea of immense pieces of peltry, worn in the house as well as on the street, and they exploit new types of jackets that protect the body. It means a brisk trade to them: it changes the dullness of autumn into the optimism of winter.

Chief among the new outdoor wraps that have appeared since the cold weather made its first approach is a service coat designed by one of the leading furriers of France and America. It has caught the fancy of every woman who likes something that suggests the military. It is a genuine service coat, copied from those worn by the soldiers, which were first fashioned in Great Britain, who has led all the world in smartness and comfort in uniforms. It is of nutria, which is a poor cousin of beaver; it is heavily lined, and yet it is not awkward in its lines through bulkiness. There is a Sam Brown belt; also a broad waist belt of leather, and the four immense pockets, which hold all the packages one needs to carry, are fastened with big leather buttons to match those down the front. There is a high rolling collar of leather and nutria combined, which is made to stand up when required and fasten under the chin with a big leather button. Smart women who are out in these coats carry one of the new, short, fashionable umbrellas, that are made to look like officers' sticks.

The British "Warm."
The American artillery officer who, after the first months of winter in France, said all he desired was a German helmet and a British "warm," has been echoed, as far as the latter part of the wish goes, by the American women, who have discovered that the British "warm" is about the most delightful bit of covering that has been invented for an unpleasant spell of weather. A woman brought the first one to this country, as far as sartorial history tells it, and she sold it to a man, who was so excited over it that he tried to get dozens over for other men. Now the women can buy them over here and wear them with content. They are made of leather and lined with sheepskin in its rough undressed state. The buttons are leather, the pockets are capacious, and the high collar is cut on good lines. (Copyright, 1918, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Real Riches.
He who has fortune in love and truth and beauty is entitled to be called rich. Time and chance and adversity have no power upon them. They are the only things a man can take with him when he goes. In the process of acquiring them they become part of him inseparably. He who has them "wears his countenance" in his face, for it is by his higher and finer things and his daily work is on the plane above the noxious, mean and mean families. The City Youth: Now, it ain't no lobster! Lobsters is red and dry like on a cake of ice in a restaurant window!

Is That So?

Mr. Stanchard was the typical tourist, so when on his wanderings he came across a depression in the ground covering several acres, he pounced upon a massive "rocking" mound, and his questions at him:

"What is this depression, can you tell me, my good man?"
"That is the bed of a lake."
"Is that so, really? And what has happened to the water?"
"It was this way: There was a picnic here last year, and they had a scare case of anchovy, and as they didn't want to carry it home they threw it in the lake."

"Yes, I see! But what has that to do with it?"
"Everything. The fish ate them, and the salt diet made them so thirsty they drank all the water."

Too Serious.
In a case of assault by a husband on his wife, the injured woman was reluctant to prosecute.
"I'll leave him to God, yer honor," she said.
"Oh, dear, no!" said the judge. "It's far too serious a matter for that."

NOTICE is hereby given that a meeting of the stockholders of the Kingston Grange Co., Inc., will be held at the office of J. E. Eighmey, 26 Broadway, Kingston, N.
